239SITUATION INFORMATION REPORT

Faced again with student unrest the French have adopted a decided "get tough" policy. The French Government has just decreed the restoration of severe disciplinary power to university rectors authorizing them to transfer or expel student troublemakers in cases where the school is closed down by student riot. The focal point is the French college at Nanterre (Paris suburban sister school of the Sorbonne and part of the University of Paris) where the general French student revolt was ignited last May. University reform laws have been enacted but since France has experienced a sluggish return to full academic life since the May revolt, disciplinary councils (created in the reform act) have not been fully implemented. The decreeing of powers to college administrators is therefore temporary and designed to keep the campus peace until the effect of the reform law can be felt.

The French experience tends to personify the continental academic control philosophy. In Spain, the asserting of government authority, quite predictably, has been swifter and harsher than in France. Germany, though, relatively quiet in recent weeks, faces the continuing delicate problem of advancing the principal of government rule and order of the academic community (as well as in all segments of the political & social life) while seeming and in fact acting "unNAZI". The political pressures of the several European nations tend to complex and differentiate the internal problems faced by each. Where France, for example, must deal with the influential political left, the Germans must look left and right.

While the order of the day in Europe can be generally (and oversimplified) defined as tough, the manner domestically of dealing with the new-left and racially oriented student upheavals is one of pacification and conciliation. Although the recent confrontation at San Francisco State College appears forceful and hardboiled beneath the surface, the College Administration has gone a long way toward bringing about campus tranquility by meeting most of the demands of the dissidents. Those teachers and students who remain at odds with SFSC are for the most part, radical, racial militants and new-left anarchists and nihilists. Demands of the reasonable and rational have been satisfied.

City College of New York, once called "The Little Red Schoolhouse" has experienced an optimistic "backlash" phenomenon. The radicals at CCNY have gone too far, believes Bernard WEINRAUB writing in the New York Times. A month ago, a small radical group on the CCNY campus blocked recruitment of engineers. The Engineering Employment Candidates reacted furiously. They held rallies, called for a resumption of interviews, threatened to confront the radicals and engaged in several brief scuffles. Fearing violence, the Administration resumed interviews. The radicals failed to renew demonstrations. "Stop SDS" buttons are now seen on campus. A decided step backward for the college new left. An SDS member at CCNY theorized that the demonstration hit the engineers in the wallets, hence the failure of the demonstration to muster wide student support.

The Harvard approach has been to stop student unrest before it starts by anticipating and introducing programs to satisfy demands before they are demanded. In September the Harvard Sociology Department introduced a "radical" credited subject (both in content and in educational philosophy). The course, Social Relations 148, is attended by over 300 Harvard students in a number of small classes. The discussion format encourages student participation and many of the sessions are led by undergraduates. The subject matter runs the gambet from Mao to Dullas. The recommended reading list draws heavily from the literature of the new-left and militant negro. Discussion topics might be "what will be the role of the Government after the revolution" or will the State wither away, as Marx has written, after the workers control the means of production. Although SR 148 was originally intended for only the fall term, students are now demanding that it be continued in the spring. It seems a rather easy demand to meet.

In a six page report the New York NAACP stated more police protection is necessary for negroes because they are the most frequent victims of crime. The NAACP report, prepared by an executive committee, called the store looter a "hood" not a Robin Hood and recommended swifter and sterner measures in criminal prosecution. Vincent BAKER, Chairman of the New York NAACP anti-crime Committee said that the organization continues to oppose police brutality "but it is not police brutality that makes people afraid to walk the streets at night". Police brutality is being "superceded by criminal brutality" said Mr. BAKER. In the report the NAACP recommends specific (and stiff) punishment for specific crimes. Two Washington, D.C. newspapers editorially endorse the report and commend it to their readership.

The Washington, D.C. Black United Front has also declared war on crime along with a demand for Statehood for Washington, D.C., a black police chief, and the arrest of Joel T. Broyhill. The Front proposes to address itself to the crime situation in the District as it effects black people perpetrating crimes against other black people. The Front will try to stop black people from killing, raping, and selling dope to other black people. No mention of these crimes committed against white people was made by the spokesmen for the Black United Front.

Whitney M. YOUNG, Executive Director of the Urban League, has announced a two million dollar program to build economic, social, and political muscle in 21 black communities across the country. The Washington, D.C. Chapter has been funded with $40,000.00 and plans to create community-owned commercial and industrial enterprises. Further, Urban League will organize political action teams in Washington, D.C. A full time professional economic developer will be employed whose role will be to develop a 10 year "Marshall Plan" aimed at creating such things as a consumer co-op, a workers co-op and a nonprofit housing corporation. Sterling TUCKER, Executive Director of the D.C. Urban League, is in charge of the $2,000,000 program.

Two wives of negro militants have gained attention in recent days. Kathleen CLEAVER, wife of Black Panther Eldridge CLEAVER, who is presently being sought by the FBI as a fugitive may be charged under federal law with harboring a fugitive. Mrs. CLEAVER reportedly withdrew $33,000.00 from a San Francisco bank for her husband's use. CLEAVER disappeared November 25th, 2 days before he was scheduled to return to prison as a parole violator.

Miriam MAKEBA, South African folk singer, complains that since her marriage to Stokely CARMICHAEL last April she has been unable to obtain bookings either on television or in prominent night clubs, and theaters.

Guerrilla, an underground publication, recently proposed that in January 1969, independent revolutionaries hold a "Congress for Cultural Revolution."

"The Congress should be organized to include the independent revolutionary media, various representatives of the underground communities, and other independent revolutionary organizations and individuals who are interested in total cultural revolution whether they be activists, anarchists, poets and artists, or socialists.

(1) The red and black should attempt to formulate a broad program of cultural revolution which includes an analysis of the tasks facing cultural revolutionaries from the point of view of the ecology, morphology and cybernetics as well as from the more traditional revolutionary informations.

(2) Polarize the underground. The CIA and other intelligence agencies have begun to consciously infiltrate the cultural revolution via grants, fake poetry projects, magazines and the usual fronts.

GUERRILLA believes it is necessary to name and define the counter-cultural revolution so that a conscious federation of cultural revolution may be built.

(3) The Congress should attempt to formulate its own 4-year plan of cultural revolution. Social revolution as a weapon of cultural revolution.

Those interested in helping to organize a national CONGRESS FOR CULTURAL REVOLUTION may write GUERRILLA."
